

Car dealerships

Major car manufacturers normally impose a certain style of architecture on their dealers to reflect their chosen brand image. ASTRON buildings allow these requirements to be met and at the same time, to meet the specific business and personal needs of the individual dealership.

Volkswagen, Audi and Skoda dealership Llorens needed new premises in Neufchâteau (Belgium) to comply with the policy of the Volkswagen Group to have separate and distinctive showroom areas for each brand. The company also needed a modern repair and maintenance facility that would employ the most up-to-date technology and equipment. The building's architecture should be stylish, functional and future oriented.

Garage owner Mr Llorens entrusted this challenge to ASTRON Builder TP Renovation. The instruction was to develop a turnkey building concept that would provide the necessary workshop space, based around the existing workshop, plus two new showrooms that would contain individually styled areas for each of the three brands. Vehicle movement around the site was to be highly flexible.

The result is a striking architectural complex of 3,200 m². It is composed of 3 different buildings set back from each other and inter-connected by cassette-walled corridors.

An attractive and functional open plan interior was developed by the architects. Each of the 3 different brands has its own show area and styling, yet movement and communication between them is simple and practical. Huge windows allow vast amounts of natural light into the reception hall and showrooms. Everything has been conceived to provide customer comfort and satisfaction while reflecting the quality and efficiency of the owner.
